MRP 2021: Guide for Writing Research Concept Note

Your research concept note is a vital part of your application for the mentoring programme. To ensure that the submitted concept note provides enough information for the multi-stakeholder selection team to make an informed decision, we advise that you present your research topic in a clear manner following the suggested content and format below:

1. Project Title
2. Introduction: Brief background of your research topic. What is already known or unknown? What research question(s) do you hope to answer through your research project?
3. Aim and Objectives: What do you want to know, prove, demonstrate, analyse, test, investigate or examine in your research? Please, highlight your research objectives in a logical sequence.
4. Proposed Methodology: What methods will you use to address your research problem? Also, specify if the equipment, software, or other resources required to facilitate the completion of your research project are available in your university or a partner institution/organisation. Briefly demonstrate that you have access to all the facilities (or equipment) you require to complete the research. Are there barriers or challenges that you anticipate in your planned research?
5. Expected outcomes, significance or rationale: Establish the importance of your research by highlighting its novelty. Highlight the possible outcomes and the expected contribution to existing knowledge. Also, state how many publications you intend to draw from your research and when, if applicable.
6. Project Timeline: Indicate the timeframe for the completion of each broad stage considering literature surveys, data collection, production, modelling, review, analysis, testing, reporting, chapter and thesis writing, and thesis submission time.

Note: It is important to demonstrate how the research align with sustainable energy, environment, climate change or biodiversity
